

Profiling Respectful Community-based Research

This issue of the PhiLab Atlantic hub newsletter entitled, “Respectful community engaged research” considers how philanthropy is complimented by an engaged approach to research to guide responsive philanthropy in the Atlantic context. In a recent video posting from the PhiLab Ontario Regional Conference, Jean Marc Mangin (President and CEO of Philanthropic Foundations of Canada) begins by discussing the current big picture for the philanthropy sector in Canada, which he describes to be at a moment of opportunity for the sector to develop new social contact with Canadians. The transformational moment he describes is due to the co-occurring political, economic and social shifts that have risen out of the pandemic. He speaks of the critical role that research plays at this moment in helping to shed light on how these transformations are relevant to practice and policy.

In this issue, we highlight our recent regional conference and its engagement with communities and provide multiple perspectives on how community-based research (CBR) is being applied in the Atlantic hub.

Exploring community-led philanthropy, together

Flashback to Alliance's article on the ways philanthropy can support community-led change from August, 2021.

"The conversation is related to many movements that seek to shift the power in philanthropy and development, but what will make it unique is the focus on 'how' we work; recognizing that community-led is a journey, not a destination.

Community-led philanthropy is about the ways philanthropists and intermediaries become more community-led themselves as we seek to support community-led change."

The banner features several overlapping covers of the Alliance magazine. The covers include titles such as 'Global health philanthropy', 'Indigenous philanthropy', and 'Philanthropy and the media'. A large circular badge on the right side of the banner reads '20% de Rabais sur les abonnements' (20% discount on subscriptions) and 'pour les membres du PhiLab' (for PhiLab members). The Alliance logo is visible in the top right corner of the banner.
